SIXTH REGIMENT NEW HAMPSHIRE VOLUNTEER INFANTRY.

(THREE YEARS)

By LYMAN JACKMAN, late Captain Sixth Regiment New Hampshire Volunteer Infantry, and Historian of Regiment.

THE Sixth Regiment was organized at Keene, in November, 1861, the men coming from all parts of the State. The regiment camped on the Cheshire Fair Ground, about a mile and a half out from the city, the camp being called "Camp Brooks." Company B was the first on the ground, reporting November 9. The men were mustered in November 27 to 30, the regimental organization being completed on the 30th.

On the 25th of December the regiment left Keene, and proceeded via Worcester, Norwich, and New York, to Washington, where it arrived at 4 p. m., on the 28th, and was assigned to Casey's Provisional Brigade, in which it remained until January 6, 1862, being camped at Bladensburg, Md.

On the 6th of January the regiment started for Annapolis, Md., to join Burnside's expedition to North Carolina. Arriving at Annapolis on the evening of the 7th, the regiment the next day went on board the steamer "Louisiana" and the ship "Martha Greenwood," and arrived at Fort Monroe on the evening of the 10th. Here the whole regiment was crowded onto the "Louisiana," and on the 11th started for Hatteras Inlet, arriving there about 5 p. m., the next day, after encountering a terrible storm on the way. The Sixth landed on the 17th and camped at "Camp Wool" on Hatteras Island. The camp being very unhealthy, the regiment, on the 24th, moved about two miles to "Camp Winfield Scott," where it remained until the 24th of February. On the 25th it embarked on the steamer "Northerner," and landed on Roanoke Island March 2, being assigned, on the 6th, to the Fourth Brigade, Department of North Carolina.

On the 8th of March six companies under Lieutenant Colonel Griffin, joined an expedition to Columbia, N. C., in search of a rebel regiment, said to be recruiting at that place; but the expedition returned without finding the enemy. On the night of April 7 Lieutenant Colonel Griffin, with four companies of the Sixth and two of the Ninth New York, went to Elizabeth City, N. C., and broke up a rebel camp. On the 19th of April, General Reno, with four regiments and a battery, moved on Camden, N. C., and met the enemy about 3 o'clock in the afternoon, and a sharp fight ensued. The Sixth, by its handsome behavior here, won complimentary notice in orders.

On the 18th of June the regiment left Roanoke Island, and reached New Berne, N. C., the next day. During this month the Sixth was assigned to the First Brigade, First Division, Department of North Carolina.

On the 1st of July the Sixth embarked to join McClellan in Virginia; but it having been reported that Richmond had been captured, the regiment returned and landed at New Berne, July 5, but re-embarked the next day, and on the 10th landed at Newport News. The regiment was assigned on the 22d to the First Brigade, Second Division, Ninth Army Corps. On the 2d of August the regiment went on board transports, reached Aquia creek on the 4th, landed and proceeded by rail to Falmouth, Va., where it arrived late that night, and camped opposite Fredericksburg. August 12 the regiment left camp and marched to join Pope's army, which was found near Culpeper, Va.

At Bull Run on the afternoon of the 29th the First Brigade was ordered to attack the enemy, who were posted in the woods. The Sixth with the Second Maryland on its right, made a gallant attack; but the Forty-Eighth Pennsylvania, on its left, fell behind, and the Sixth being exposed to a murderous fire on its left flank, was compelled to fall back. This battle was the most disastrous to the regiment of any in which it participated, two hundred and ten being killed, wounded, or missing out of four hundred and fifty officers and men who went into the fight. On the next day the Sixth with its brigade acted as a support to the Second Brigade of the Second Division of the corps. The night of the 30th the Ninth Corps covered the retreat of Pope's army. About 6 P. M., September 1, the enemy attacked the corps near Chantilly, Va., and the Sixth being brought into the fight, was engaged until dark, when the enemy withdrew.

The army then fell back to the defences of Washington; and here the Sixth remained until the 7th of September, when, with its corps, it moved; and passing through Frederick, Md., was at South Mountain on the 14th, being used with its division as a support. At Antietam on the 17th, the Sixth was again engaged, taking part in a charge made to take the "stone bridge" (afterwards known as "Burnside's bridge"), on Antietam creek.

A few days later the regiment marched to Pleasant Valley, Md., remained until October 27, when the army left Pleasant Valley, crossed the Potomac by pontoon bridges at Berlin, and took up a line of march along the valley east of the Blue Ridge, with Richmond for its objective point. The regiment was now, with its division, in the advance of the army; and on the 14th of November, being a part of the advance picket line, skirmished at Amissville. At Warrenton (or White Sulphur) Springs, November 15th, the regiment was lightly engaged.

On the 19th of November the regiment arrived at Falmouth in front of Fredericksburg, and camped north of the Phillips house until December 12, when it marched into Fredericksburg. At about 1 P. M., the next day, the Sixth, with its brigade, advanced to assault the enemy's works on Marye's Heights, and was engaged until dark. On the 15th it returned to its former camp-ground at Falmouth, and remained until the 10th of February, 1863, when it was sent to Newport News.

Orders were received on the 20th of March to break camp and take transports to Baltimore, and from thence to proceed by rail to Cincinnati. The Ninth Army Corps was ordered to report to General Burnside, who had been transferred to the Department of the Ohio. As the central and southern portions of Kentucky were being plundered by the rebels, General Burnside decided early in April to send the Ninth Corps into that State. Accordingly the Sixth proceeded to Lexington, Ky., and from thence to Winchester, on the 8th of April; and leaving Winchester on the 16th, arrived at Richmond (Ky.), on the 18th. The regiment then proceeded to Paint Lick creek on the 3d of May, and to Lancaster on the 10th, remaining there until the 23d, when it advanced to Crab Orchard, with a view to joining in the movement upon East Tennessee, then contemplated by General Burnside. Orders for the movement were countermanded, however, and on the 4th of June the regiment left Crab Orchard; and at evening on the 6th, reached Cincinnati, where the night was spent. The next morning the regiment left Cincinnati, and reached Cairo on the 8th, went on board the steamer "General Anderson" the next day, and passed down the Mississippi river to join General Grant in his operations against Vicksburg.

On the 13th of June the fleet reached Milliken's Bend, and on the 14th the Sixth disembarked near the canal dug by General Williams to turn the river so that the Union boats might pass Vicksburg unmolested. On the 15th the regiment marched southwest to a point on the river about ten miles below Vicksburg, returning the same day; and on the morning of the 16th, went up the Yazoo river to Haynes' Bluff, and camped at Milldale, about a mile distant. Here the regiment remained until the 22d, when it marched eastward, and on the 25th came upon some of the enemy's outposts near the Big Black river. After waiting here a few days the movement was continued July 1st to Oak Ridge. Vicksburg surrendered on the 4th, and the Sixth immediately started with the army in pursuit of the enemy under General Johnston. The rebels made a stand at Jackson, Miss., and here the Sixth was engaged from the 10th to the 17th, when it was discovered that Johnston had evacuated the city. On the 20th the army began its return march, and three days afterward the Sixth reached its old camp at Milldale. Here the regiment remained until August 8, when it embarked and made its way up the river to Cairo, and thence by rail to Cincinnati, which was reached on the 20th. On the 23d the Sixth proceeded by rail to Nicholasville, and camped a few miles from the village near Camp Nelson, Ky.

On the 9th of September the Sixth was sent to Frankfort to do provost duty. Leaving Frankfort the 24th, the regiment reached Russellville the next day, where it remained until the 26th of October; then it left for Camp Nelson to perform provost duty, and arrived there the next day. While here many of the men re-enlisted, and on January 16, 1864, the re-enlisted men left for New Hampshire to spend the furlough of thirty days granted by terms of re-enlistment. They were afterwards re-furloughed, and did not leave the State until the 18th of March, when they proceeded to Annapolis, Md., to join the Ninth Corps, then re-assembling at that place. The remainder of the regiment joined, and the Sixth was assigned to the Second Brigade, Second Division, Ninth Army Corps, April 20. On the 23d of April the regiment marched with its corps to join the Army of the Potomac, reaching it in time to take part in the battle of the Wilderness on the 6th of May, where, with the Second Brigade, it made an heroic charge, capturing a large number of prisoners. From the 8th to the 20th, the Sixth was at Spottsylvania, being severely engaged on the 12th and 18th. Starting on the 21st, the regiment pushed on to the North Anna river, where it was in the reserve from the 23d to the 25th, and was in the front line on the 26th, when Lieutenant-Colonel Pearson was killed. The army moved on the night of the 26th, towards Totopotomoy creek, where the Sixth was engaged on the 30th and 31st.

June 2 and 3 the regiment was engaged near Bethesda Church, and from the 4th to the 12th, was under fire at Cold Harbor. On the night of the 12th the army withdrew, and at noon of the 16th the Ninth Corps arrived in front of Petersburg. Here the regiment was constantly under fire until the 20th of August, taking part in the assault following the explosion of the "Mine" on the 30th of July. August 20 the corps withdrew and moved to the Weldon Railroad. Here on the 20th and 21st, the Sixth assisted in repelling two desperate attacks made by the rebels. A new line of intrenchments was thrown up, connecting with those formerly held, and the regiment remained here under fire until September 30.

On the 30th of September and the day following, the Sixth was engaged near Poplar Springs Church, about one hundred and twenty-five officers and men being killed, wounded, or captured. Works were thrown up, and the regiment remained here until early in December, participating without loss in the engagement at Hatcher's Run, on the 27th of October.

Early in December the corps returned to its original position in front of Petersburg, the Sixth lying in rear of Fort Alexander Hays until April 1, 1865. While here the regiment took part in a reconnoissance to Nottoway Court House, December 10, 11, and 12, 1864. On the night of April 1, 1865, the Sixth, with its brigade, made a successful attack on the enemy's works to the left of Fort Davis, and on the morning of the 2d participated in a second successful attack near Fort Sedgwick.

From Petersburg the regiment marched in pursuit of Lee's army, arriving at Burkeville on the 9th of April. On the 20th the regiment marched for City Point, and leaving there on the 26th, embarked on the steamer "D. R. Martin." Alexandria was reached the next day, where the regiment remained in camp until mustered out on the 17th of July. On the 18th of July the regiment left Alexandria, and proceeded by rail to New York, thence by boat to Norwich, and arrived at Concord, July 23.

The regiment during its term of service served in seventeen different states; meeting all the requisitions of duty, however onerous or perilous, with cheerful and ready efficiency. While it is not asserted that the Sixth was the best regiment sent out from New Hampshire, the claim may be made, and can be maintained, that it was equal to the best. Its record has added a brilliant chapter to the history of New Hampshire's always glorious achievements in war.

The Sixth New Hampshire Volunteers was attached to General Casey's Provisional Brigade, near Washington, D. C., December 28, 1861; General Burnside's Expedition to North Carolina, January 6, 1862; Fourth Brigade, Department of North Carolina, March 6, 1862; First Brigade, First Division, Department of North Carolina, June, 1862; First Brigade, Second Division, Ninth Army Corps, July 22, 1862; District of Kentucky, Department of Ohio, September 9, 1863; on Veteran Furlough, January 16, 1864; in Ninth Army Corps, unassigned, March, 1864; Second Brigade, Second Division, Ninth Army Corps, April 20, 1864.

SEVENTH REGIMENT NEW HAMPSHIRE VOLUNTEER INFANTRY.

(THREE YEARS.)

By HENRY F. W. LITTLE, late Second Lieutenant Seventh Regiment New Hampshire Volunteer Infantry, and Historian of Regiment.

THE recruitment and organization of the Seventh Regiment was somewhat different from that of any other force raised in the State during the War of the Rebellion of 1861. Although the regiment was credited to New Hampshire, the authority to accept and provide for recruits, and the privilege to make all official appointments, was by direction of the War Department at Washington, D. C., under date of September 2, 1861, vested in Joseph C. Abbott, who, at the commencement of the war and for some years previous, had been adjutant-general of the State, and who, desiring active service, had made application to the secretary of war to raise a regiment of infantry. The acceptance of this regiment was with the distinct understanding that the War Department would revoke the commissions of all officers who might be found incompetent for the proper discharge of their duties, and one of the requirements was that the regiment should be ready for marching orders thirty days subsequent to September 9, 1861.

About this time the state authorities were busily engaged in organizing and equipping four regiments of infantry, three companies of sharpshooters, a light battery, and a battalion of cavalry, all of which drew quite heavily upon the available material of the State, and the successful organization of the Seventh Regiment, which was somewhat in the nature of an individual enterprise, was by many considered doubtful. The state authorities were asked merely to pay to those enlisting in this regiment the ten dollars bounty which they paid to all others, and which they readily agreed to do. The rendezvous of the recruits was established at Manchester. Circulars were at once issued, and notwithstanding the competition of other organizations, by the first of November eight hundred men had arrived in camp.

It was the understanding from the outset that the governor and council would commission such officers as were designated by General Abbott, he waiving the position of colonel only on the condition that it should be given to some graduate of West Point. The colonelcy was accordingly bestowed on First Lieut. Haldimand S. Putnam, of the United States Topographical Engineers, who was considered the ablest and most accomplished soldier commissioned from New Hampshire. Gen. Joseph C. Abbott was commissioned as lieutenant-colonel; Daniel Smith, of Dover, as major; Andrew H. Young, of the same city, as quartermaster; Thomas A. Henderson, also of Dover, as adjutant; Dr. W. W. Brown, of Manchester, as surgeon; and Rev. J. C. Emerson, of Fisherville (now Penacook), as chaplain. The captains and subalterns were selected where they could best contribute to the speedy enlistment of the men. The organization was fairly completed, and the officers and men all mustered into service by December 14; and on the 14th of January, 1862, the regiment left New Hampshire under orders to proceed to New York city.

The first experience of the Seventh was as different from that of other regiments as the manner of its organization. It had already spent a month in camp at Manchester since its completion, engaged in drill, and upon its arrival in New York, the morning after its departure, it was ordered into quarters at White Street barracks, where it passed another month of comparative inactivity, relieved only by an occasional dress parade or drill in one of the city squares.

February 13 orders were received to embark for Fort Jefferson, Fla., and six companies, under command of Colonel Putnam, embarked on the ship "S. R. Mallory," and the remaining four companies under Lieutenant-Colonel Abbott on the barque "Tycoon," and both sailed the same day. The latter reached Fort Jefferson after sixteen and the former after twenty-one days' sail. Small-pox broke out on the "Tycoon," and one man of the Seventh fell a victim to the disease before reaching the destination. At this post the regiment was kept busy on fatigue duty and drill, and was also drilled in heavy artillery practice, having for instructors men detailed from Battery M, First U. S. Artillery; and while the regiment remained here, for a period of three months and a half, its duty, though not dangerous, was severe, and the monthly return for May, 1862, shows that one hundred and twenty-eight were on the sick list with the regiment, and twenty-five were absent sick. While at this post small-pox in a virulent form again broke out, from which the regiment suffered severely.

On the 16th of June the Seventh again embarked, on the steamer "Ericson," and touching at Key West, arrived at Port Royal, S. C., on the 22d. This movement was made on account of the expedition on James Island, but before the arrival of the troops from Key West the disastrous battle had been fought, and the Seventh was ordered into camp at Beaufort, S. C. While here the regiment was engaged in picket duty and drill, and a malignant form of typhoid fever broke out among the men, which so reduced the regiment for effective duty that on September 1 it was ordered to St. Augustine, Fla., on light duty, that the men might recruit, two hundred having been lost to the regiment by death and discharge since it left Manchester. March 29, 1863, Colonel Putnam, with five companies, was ordered to join the expedition against Charleston, which left Hilton Head about the 1st of April. The movement proving a failure, the detachment of the Seventh returned to St. Augustine, after an absence of about two weeks, when on the 10th of May it was ordered to Fernandina, two companies being put in garrison in Fort Clinch, and the remainder being employed on fatigue and picket duty.

June 7 the regiment was ordered to Hilton Head, preparatory to another attempt to take Charleston. While at Beaufort Major Smith had died of disease, and other commissioned officers had been discharged. Although the regiment had received about a hundred recruits since entering the service, yet there were in June, 1863, only five hundred and thirty-three men reported "present for duty," and the aggregate, including recruits, of over eleven hundred had been reduced to seven hundred and twenty-nine officers and men, borne on the rolls at that date, making a loss of nearly four hundred. On the 17th the regiment embarked on the steamer "Delaware" at Hilton Head, bound for Folly Island, where a landing was effected about midnight; and from this time until July 10 the regiment was actively engaged in the construction of batteries on the north end of Folly Island, with regular tours of picket duty. On the morning of July 10 these batteries opened at daylight, surprising the enemy completely and covering the landing of a force under General Strong, who carried the fortifications on the south end of Morris Island, and which was followed by the crossing over to Morris Island of the whole remaining force, and the Seventh went on picket at night within a mile of Fort Wagner and commenced the entrenchments afterwards known as the first parallel in the siege of Fort Wagner. On the morning of the 11th a portion of General Strong's column made an unsuccessful assault upon Fort Wagner, in which the Seventh was ordered in for support, and in the evening the regiment was advanced nearer the enemy's pickets, and commenced the line of entrenchments afterwards known as the second parallel. On the 12th the regiment was relieved from the picket line, and Colonel Putnam was assigned to the command of the second brigade of Seymour's division, and left the regiment, never to resume the position of regimental commander. From the 12th to the 18th the regiment was actively engaged in the trenches and on fatigue duty, in preparation for the second assault on Fort Wagner.

About sunset on the 18th the First Brigade under General Strong, supported by the Second Brigade under Colonel Putnam, were ordered to make an assault on Fort Wagner, and during the hour and a half that the engagement lasted the Seventh lost two hundred and eighteen killed, wounded, and missing, and of this number eighteen were officers, eleven of whom—including our beloved colonel—were either slain outright, or mortally wounded and left in the enemy's hands, and on the following morning only nine officers and two hundred and fifty-three men were in line. In this engagement the Seventh suffered the loss of more officers than were lost by any other regiment in any one engagement during the war.

It was now determined to compel the evacuation of Fort Wagner by siege, and during the time from July 18 to September 7 the regiment was busily engaged on fatigue duty and on duty in the trenches, and also assisted in the construction of the "Swamp Angel" battery. On the morning of September 7th, a third assault upon Fort Wagner was ordered, and the Seventh was ordered in as a part of the storming party; but fortunately, in the early hours of the morning, the enemy evacuated the island, and the siege of Fort Wagner was at an end. On the 20th of December the Seventh left Morris Island and went into camp at St. Helena Island, opposite Hilton Head, where it was assigned to the brigade commanded by Col. Joseph R. Hawley. Upwards of three hundred recruits had by this time been received, and the Enfield rifled muskets were exchanged for Spencer's repeating carbines—a seven-shooter—and promotions had been made from the ranks to fill the places of the officers who had been killed or who had resigned. Many of the recruits were substitutes, and of a most worthless class, and but few made good soldiers. Here the time was occupied at drill until February 4, 1864, when the regiment was ordered to embark on the steamer "Ben Deford," and at once set sail for Florida, to take part in the somewhat disastrous campaign of General Seymour. The regiment at this time numbered six hundred and fifty men fit for duty. The regiment arrived at Jacksonville, Fla., February 9, and at once began its march for Sanderson, toward Lake City; and the enemy having concentrated a force at Olustee, on the 20th the battle of Olustee was fought, which resulted in disaster to the Union arms, and the forces under General Seymour were forced to retreat to Jacksonville, and thus ended this ill-starred campaign. The regiment lost in this battle two hundred and nine; and of this number three were officers, who were either killed outright or subsequently died of their wounds. While at Jacksonville one hundred and eighty-three re-enlisted and went home on a thirty days' furlough.

April 14 the regiment embarked for Fernandina, where on the 17th it again embarked for Fortress Monroe, Va., arriving on the 21st, and was ordered to Gloucester Point, where it disembarked and became a part of the Army of the James under General Butler.

On the 5th of May, the Seventh, with the rest of the forces under General Butler, embarked on transports and proceeded up the James river, landing at Bermuda Hundred, fifteen miles below Richmond, meeting with no opposition. The next morning the Army of the James, consisting of the Tenth and Eighteenth Corps, was early in motion and had commenced an advance, as was generally supposed, upon Petersburg, which at that time could easily have been taken and held; but after marching about six miles the whole army was ordered into camp, and a line of heavy earthworks ordered to be constructed, stretching across the peninsula, from the James river on the right to the Appomattox on the left.

Early on the morning of May 9, General Butler ordered an advance on Petersburg, and after a march of about five miles, the Tenth Corps reached Chester Station, on the Richmond & Petersburg Railroad, meeting with little opposition, and after driving the enemy's skirmishers back to their Petersburg entrenchments and assisting in demolishing the railroad by tearing up the track and twisting the rails, the Army of the James swung around to the right and started toward Richmond. On the morning of the 10th the division of General Terry, to which the Seventh belonged, was in the vicinity of Lempster Hill, where was brought on a severe engagement with Confederate troops who were marching to the relief of Petersburg. The enemy were handsomely repulsed, although at a considerable loss on the Union side. On the 13th the Army of the James again advanced toward Richmond, and skirmishing at once commenced, which was very heavy; the ground was contested inch by inch, and about 5 o'clock the Seventh supported a desperate charge of the Third New Hampshire, and the enemy was driven from the first line of his defences, and forced back to Fort Darling. On the morning of the 16th, during a dense fog, the enemy charged our lines, and a severe battle followed, known as Drewry's Bluff. The troops were then withdrawn to their line of defences near Bermuda Hundred. On the 9th of June the Seventh took a prominent part in the demonstration on Petersburg, under General Gillmore, which was made by approaching on the south side of the Appomattox river; and again on the 16th, in the reconnoissance towards the Petersburg turnpike, where, meeting Pickett's division of Longstreet's corps, which was en route to re-enforce the Confederates at Petersburg, a severe engagement was brought on, lasting until dark. The Seventh was actively engaged on the 16th of August in the hard-fought battle of Deep Bottom, where Lieutenant-Colonel Henderson was mortally wounded.

Again, on the 24th of August, the Seventh was ordered into the trenches before Petersburg, where it was constantly occupied until September 28, when the regiment was ordered, with other troops, to the north side of the James river, where, on the 29th, they were engaged in the attack on New Market Heights, and a reconnoissance towards Richmond, and in the severe battle of Laurel Hill, October 7, and in the memorable reconnoissance on the Darbytown road, October 27 and 28. It was a period of uninterrupted and exceedingly severe duty. Two great armies were contending for their lines with the most daring pertinacity, and each unceasingly watching for the slightest advantage over the other. The monthly returns for the month of November of this year showed a little less than three hundred men fit for duty, though the effective strength of the regiment had been considerably increased by recruits and substitutes during the previous month. Hawley's brigade, to which the Seventh was attached, was armed with the Spencer seven-shooting carbine, which proved a formidable weapon.

Among other regiments selected for the expedition to New York, on the occasion of the Presidential election, was the Seventh, which was encamped at Laurel Hill. On the morning of November 4 the regiment broke camp and marched to Jones' Landing, on the James river, and took transports for Fortress Monroe, arriving at that place on the evening of the 5th, where it was transferred to the steamer "United States," and reached New York, after a comfortable passage of forty-eight hours, disembarking at Fort Richmond, on Staten Island. On the morning of the 8th the regiment went aboard an army transport and was taken to the city, and lay in East river, near Fulton Ferry, three days, prepared for any emergency which might require their services, as a riot had been feared at the time of election. Happily, our services were not needed, and on the 11th the Seventh returned to Fort Richmond, and on the 14th re-embarked on the "United States," reaching Jones' Landing on the 17th, and at once marched to its old camp-ground, near Laurel Hill, where it commenced the erection of winter quarters. In December one hundred and ninety-five men were mustered out, having served their full term of three years, and such of the commissioned officers as had served three years and did not wish to be re-mustered for another term. One hundred and eleven recruits were received, however, toward filling their places. These were of the usual class of substitutes, and mostly of a worthless character, and during the winter thirty-five deserted.

The spring campaign of the Seventh opened very early, and the regiment received orders on the 3d of January, 1865, to be ready to march the next morning, and at once proceeded to Fortress Monroe, where it embarked on the second expedition against Fort Fisher. Colonel Abbott was placed in command of the brigade and the command of the regiment devolved upon Lieutenant-Colonel Rollins, and at 10 o'clock, on the evening of January 15, the Seventh led the assault on the sea-angle of the fort, and half an hour later planted its colors on the bastion of the surrendered work. The Seventh, with one other regiment, formed in a line southward of the fort, and pressed on toward Battery Buchanan, and this earth-work, with about a thousand prisoners, soon surrendered, and the whole of the immense fortifications, which had been considered impregnable, fell into the possession of the Union army.

After the conquest of Fort Fisher the Seventh was occupied in strengthening the works in front of Wilmington, in making reconnoissances, and in picket duty, until the 19th of February, when the enemy commenced retiring and General Terry at once commenced pursuit. Reaching Wilmington on the 22d, the enemy, dispirited and disheartened, was still followed ten miles farther, to a place called North-east Ferry. The regiment, with the rest of its brigade, was then ordered back to Wilmington, and assigned to the garrison of that place. Early in June it was sent to Goldsborough, where it remained until ordered to be discharged. Its days of active campaigning were now over, and the survivors of its many labors and numerous battles, from Virginia to the southern coast of Florida, were mustered out of the service of the United States on the 20th of July, and on the 30th the steamer which had borne them from City Point, Va., came to anchor at New London, Conn. They proceeded by rail to Manchester, where, more than four years before, they had left Old Camp Hale, amid the plaudits of the people, and were received with shouts and cheers and a hearty welcome from a grateful country in whose service they had engaged. Proceeding to Concord, an escort and refreshments awaited them and His Excellency Governor Smyth addressed the regiment, thanking them in behalf of the State for the service they had performed and the honor they had won.

Three hundred and twenty men and twenty-two officers returned. Of these, less than one hundred were among those who left the State in 1861. Of the original field and staff only one remained. The first colonel and the second lieutenant-colonel had fallen in battle.

As soon as possible the regiment was paid and the men at once proceeded to their homes, separating, after a long and arduous service, never again to feel the old familiar touch of "elbow to elbow"; and with saddened hearts, comrade bade farewell to comrade, and the noble ranks of the old Seventh Regiment were broken for the last time, never again to be re-formed, and the organization of one more of New Hampshire's gallant regiments ceased to exist—except in history. The people of our State will ever hold in grateful remembrance the names of the noble patriots recorded on these rolls, and will carefully preserve and guard the war-worn and tattered flags of our old command returned by us to the State.

The Seventh New Hampshire Volunteers was at Fort Jefferson, Fla., March 9 to June 16, 1862; at Port Royal Island, S. EIGHTH REGIMENT NEW HAMPSHIRE VOLUNTEER INFANTRY.

(Known as First New Hampshire Cavalry, December 16, 1863, to February 29, 1864, and as Second New Hampshire Cavalry, March 1 to July 25, 1864.)

(THREE YEARS.)

By JOHN M. STANYAN, late Captain Eighth Regiment New Hampshire Volunteer Infantry, and Historian of the Regiment.

ENLISTMENTS for the Eighth Regiment began early in the month of September, 1861. The first company went into "Camp Currier" at Manchester, N. H., on October 12, and on the 9th of December the regiment was full. On January 25, 1862, it was transferred from "Camp Currier" to Fort Independence, in Boston Harbor. On February 16 six companies under the command of Col. Hawkes Fearing, embarked on the ship "E. Wilder Farley," destined on the "Butler Expedition" to reach Ship Island in Mississippi Sound. On the 18th day of February the four remaining companies, Lieut. Col. O. W. Lull commanding, left for the same destination on the ship "Eliza and Ella." On March 18, 1862, the first named arrived at Ship Island; and on March 29, after a very stormy and uncomfortable passage, the "Eliza and Ella" anchored at the rendezvous, and the regiment pitched its camp at about two miles from the landing, and the nearest of any to a passable drill area on a sandy patch.

On April 9, 1862, the regiment was in line with fourteen thousand troops passing in review before Maj. Gen. B. F. Butler, commanding. On April 25 General Butler, having arrived in New Orleans, ordered through Brigadier-General Shepley, Lieutenant-Colonel Lull with two hundred and fifty men to take possession of Forts Pike, Wood, and Macomb.

On May 4 the above orders were carried out, Companies A, F, and K being chosen for that purpose. On May 21 the right wing pitched its tents at "Camp Parapet," just above Carrollton; and on July 6, the last company, F, coming in, the regiment was again together.

On September 19, 1862, Companies A, B, G, and K, under the command of Lieutenant-Colonel Lull, went up to Pass Manchac, and drove in the enemy's pickets. On October 11 another expedition to the Pass was executed by the same officer, with Companies G and H. They surprised the enemy and captured seven rebels.

On October 15, at "Camp Kearney," Carrollton, the regiment formed a part of General Weitzel's brigade, which included the Seventy-fifth New York, First Louisiana, and the Twelfth and Thirteenth Connecticut regiments, the Sixth Massachusetts and First Maine batteries, Perkins' company of Massachusetts Cavalry, and Barrett's, Godfrey's, and Williamson's companies of Louisiana Cavalry. On October 24 the brigade sailed for Donaldsonville, landed, and on the 26th followed the Bayou Lafourche in a westerly direction, the Eighth and Perkins's cavalry being transferred to the right bank.

At Georgia Landing, or Labadieville, the enemy were in ambush, but were driven. A general engagement ensued which resulted in a Union victory, seventeen of the enemy being killed, including their colonel, McPheeters, a large number wounded, and one hundred and seventy prisoners being taken. Our regimental loss was, twelve killed, thirty-two wounded, and one missing. Among the killed were two of the best of our line officers, Captains Warren and Kelliher. The brigade pushed on to Thibodeaux. There, by the appointment of General Butler, Lieut. Col. O. W. Lull held court as provost judge, with Company B detailed as provost guard.

On December 30 the brigade was broken up. Company B remained at Thibodeaux, and the remainder of the regiment marched to Baton Rouge, and camped opposite on the west side of the river. The destruction of the rebel armed steamer "Cotton" occurred in the first part of January, and Lieutenant-Colonel Lull in that affair acted as chief-of-staff to General Weitzel.

On January 23, 1863, the regiment moved to the east side and quartered in tents on the Bluff, comprising, with the Fourth Wisconsin, the One Hundred and Thirty-third and One Hundred and Seventy-third New York regiments, and Nims's battery, the second brigade of Emory's division, and commanded by Acting Brig. Gen. Halbert E. Paine. At this time Lieutenant-Colonel Lull, with Company B, returned from Thibodeaux and rejoined the regiment.

On February 7, at 3 A. M., the brigade, with the regular battery under Lieutenant Norris (in place of Nims), under command of General Paine, started for Indian Village on Bayou Plaquemine. It was intended to rout a force of Confederates supposed to be on an island at the junction of the bayous Plaquemine and Grossetete; but by orders from General Emory the exploration of the country was left to Colonel Currie, and General Paine with the Eighth and his own regiment, the Fourth Wisconsin, returned to Plaquemine and embarked for Algiers, where the force remained in camp until March 5, when the two regiments went up the river, and on the 10th the brigade was reunited at Baton Rouge.

On March 13, under orders, the brigade started towards Port Hudson, at the head of Emory's division. At 11 P. M. bivouacked. At 2 A. M. on the 14th advanced again. At 11 A. M. reached the twelve-mile post from Baton Rouge. The fleet having passed Port Hudson, General Banks ordered a return, saying that the "object of the expedition had been accomplished." On the 20th returned to Baton Rouge, and had daily brigade drills on the race course; 28th,*it moved to "Camp Indiana," beyond the cemetery.

On April 3 the Second Brigade, under General Paine went to Algiers, kept up the daily brigade drills until the 7th, and then started for Brashear City en route of first Red River expedition. It was found that the enemy were well fortified at Bisland near Centreville. During this and the following day the Eighth was in the front line of attack, and at the final advance on the 14th the General planted the flag of the Eighth on the crest of the enemy's works. At Opelousas on April 20 Company G was ordered to become mounted infantry.

On May 8 the regiment reached Alexandria and camped on the Red river below the city. On the 15th the Third Division, which included our Second Brigade, marched under the command of General Paine in the direction of Port Hudson, and on the 23d took position on the right of the line of investment at the Big Sandy, over which we advanced on the 25th. In the assault on the 27th the regiment ran over all opposition and was soon in the first line of attack, driving all of the enemy not killed or taken prisoners within the lines of their fortifications; but this was not accomplished without the serious loss of one hundred and twenty-four killed and wounded out of the regimental attacking force of two hundred and ninety-eight. Here, also, we lost the energetic and brave Lieutenant-Colonel Lull, who was leading the regiment. An assaulting column of about three thousand men was prepared to advance on the works on June 14. As the special order No. 130 read, "the advanced skirmishers should be of the best troops, they and the storming party might each be a well-trying regiment." Gen. Halbert E. Paine commanded this force, and the Eighth New Hampshire and the Fourth Wisconsin were in the advance as skirmishers. The attack was a success, and if the following column had dashed forward Port Hudson would have surrendered at that date; but the enemy finally became discouraged at the constant and persistent attrition and yielded on July 8, at which time the volunteer storming column, their services happily not called for, marched at the head of the forces, and our own Eighth in second place in recognition of its work at the siege, and it was further complimented by having its camp ground within Port Hudson directly under the Stars and Stripes waving from the flagstaff of the Post. The regimental loss at this assault was one hundred and thirty killed, wounded, and missing, out of two hundred and seventeen that advanced.

Following the siege of Port Hudson came the inglorious attempted attack upon Sabine Pass. Our regiment left Baton Rouge on September 3, 1863, and sailed down within sight of the earthworks at the mouth of the Sabine river. After much privation and suffering they got back to Algiers on September 12.

The Second Brigade was now formed under Brig. Gen. James W. McMillan. It consisted of the Fourteenth Maine, Twenty-sixth Massachusetts, Eighth New Hampshire, and the One Hundred and Thirty-third New York.

The second Red River expedition now was inaugurated, and on October 3 the regiment left Bisland and marched slowly to the northward. Opelousas was reached on October 24, and on October 27 the first anniversary of the battle of Georgia Landing was celebrated at Vermillion bayou.

New Iberia was reached on November 12, and on December 12 a parcel of three hundred recruits was brought to the regiment. On December 21 General McMillan issued an order, detaching the Eighth from his brigade in order that it be changed into cavalry. Horses and saddles had been drawn on the 13th, and on January 1, at Franklin, talk of re-enlistment had begun. On the 6th the regiment was ordered to New Orleans through "snow two inches deep." On the 9th at Brashear City, on the 10th at Algiers, and on the 13th at Steam Cotton Press in New Orleans.

February 19 General Order No. 25 was issued, directing that the names of battles "Georgia Landing," "Bisland," and "Port Hudson" be inscribed upon the regimental colors. For the space of two months the regiment was drilled in cavalry tactics for eight hours a day. The men were armed with sabres, Sharpe's breech-loading carbines and Remington revolvers. The remainder of the brigade was now made up of the Third and Sixth Massachusetts, the Third Maryland, and First Texas Cavalry, Col. N. A. M. Dudley, of the Sixth Massachusetts, commanding.

On March 2, 1864, at 4 P. M. the regiment crossed the river, and on the 6th reached Labadieville, passed through Thibodeaux on the 7th, Tigerville on the 8th, and reached Brashear City on the 9th, there remaining until the 13th. On that date the advance force of cavalry under Gen. A. L. Lee left Franklin, and the Second New Hampshire Cavalry with it, arrived at Alexandria on the 19th. It then advanced to Bayou Rapides, where, still skirmishing lightly with the enemy daily, the regiment remained until the 26th. It then marched to Henderson's Hill, on the 29th moved to Cane river, and on the 30th entered the town of Natchitoches, still driving the Confederates. On April 2 it made a reconnoissance to Crump's Hill, returning at night; and on the 3d and 4th advancing towards Pleasant Hill. At this date General Lee was ordered to report to Brigadier-General Franklin until further orders, and the cavalry to advance towards Shreveport. General Franklin refused "to support Lee with a brigade of infantry," and on the 7th the Second New Hampshire Cavalry reached Wilson's Farm, where a sharp engagement ensued, resulting in its holding the ground.

On Tuesday morning, April 8, the regiment was in "poor condition for work but full of courage," and joined the brigade as it came up, advancing towards Mansfield (Sabine Cross Roads). It was soon ordered out upon the right flank to protect the advance; Company D, being sent out upon a road parallel to, and distant from the Mansfield road, two miles, struck a superior force of the enemy about noon. The main body of the Second New Hampshire Cavalry attacked the Confederate infantry at just 12 M. and found it in strong force at the Cross Roads, and were repulsed with loss. They retreated a short distance and then, with a fresh supply of ammunition, held the front line of skirmishing for over two hours, being then relieved and ordered to support the batteries. The thin line of infantry gave way under a heavy rebel charge at 4 P. M., and the retreat commenced. The Second New Hampshire Cavalry slowly falling back, and only finding shelter at night four miles at the rear—behind the immovable wall of the Nineteenth Army Corps under General Emory. Still retreating, the Second Cavalry reached Pleasant Hill, fifteen miles away, on the 9th at 4 A. M., and without rest, started as guard of a train for Grand Ecore, distant twenty-six miles, which place was reached on Sunday morning, April 10.

On the 18th General Lee was relieved of his command, also Colonel Dudley, General Arnold and Colonel Davis assuming their places. The duty of the regiment was on picket each day. On the 18th Lieutenant-Colonel Flanders returned from the North and took command. April 21, broke camp and started in the direction of Alexandria. On the 23d occurred the fight at Cane River. The Second New Hampshire Cavalry protected the column, fell back and repulsed the enemy at Monett's Bluff; and at noon on the 24th, occupied Henderson's Hill, and went on picket line, repulsed attacks, and at 4 P. M. joined the brigade on the retreat as rear guard. This was continued without intermission until April 29, when they reached the suburbs of Alexandria. Instantly, without rest, the Second New Hampshire Cavalry was ordered to march on scout across the Red river, proceeded in that direction twenty-four miles, and had a brush with a large force of rebels, estimated at two thousand, under the command of General Liddell. It was not until Sunday, May 8, that the regiment had even a partial rest, and General Arnold officially protested against such arduous service.

On May 9th left Alexandria and relieved Colonel Lucas's brigade on the Opelousas road. On the 13th continued the retreat. The Second New Hampshire Cavalry, being the rear guard, was constantly exposed to attack, as at Wilson's Landing, where Lieutenant Cobbs was murdered.

Sunday, the 15th, Lieutenant-Colonel Flanders went on board a river boat, and Captain Healey assumed command. Night and day it was continual skirmishing, hard fighting, and repulsion of the enemy, on through Marksville, Moreauville, at Bayou de Glaize, and Yellow Bayou, to the Atchafalaya river, which was reached on May 18. On the morning of the 19th the regiment crossed that river on "the bridge of boats," and arrived at Morganzia on May 22.

On the 24th the regiment was assigned for duty as cavalry in the Nineteenth Army Corps, Col. E. J. Davis, First Texas Cavalry, commanding. It was employed in scouting on the Atchafalaya and Mississippi rivers. On June 10, in obedience to orders, the horses were turned over to the proper authorities, preparatory to going on the promised veteran furlough. On the 14th all the troops were reviewed by Maj. Gen. D. E. Sickles; and on the 15th, by order of the Department Commander, the regiment turned over all arms and equipments, and started on the 16th for New Orleans, which city it left on July 11, arriving in Concord, N. H., on the 23d. On the 25th official orders were issued, returning it to infantry organization.

On August 29 it started on its return trip to Louisiana, arriving at "Camp Parapet" on September 6, but soon left for Natchez, Miss., where during the fall it did garrison and picket duty.

This sketch would be incomplete if it failed to record the enforced absence of fifty-five members of the old Second New Hampshire Cavalry, who were captured in the Red River campaign, and spent six months in the rebel prison at "Camp Ford," Tyler, Texas. Twenty-five were captured on April 8, 1864, at Sabine Cross Roads, and thirty more were added to their number during that campaign. They were exchanged on October 23, and rejoined the regiment at Natchez, Miss., on November 13, 1864. From there expeditions went out occasionally, capturing stores and stock, and the enemy were scarcely ever encountered.

The term of service of the regiment expired on December 23, and shortly after the non-veterans and a majority of the officers were ordered home to be mustered out of the service. This occurred early in January, 1865, and the regimental organization of the Eighth New Hampshire ceased to exist.

On January 1, 1865, by Special Orders, No. 20, the veterans and recruits of the Eighth remaining in the service, numbering three hundred and sixteen, were organized under the direction of Brigadier-General Brayman, into three companies, and designated as the Veteran Battalion, Eighth New Hampshire Volunteers, and Captain Landers assumed command by virtue of seniority of rank. On the 9th of January they crossed the river to Vidalia and went into garrison. The nearest post of the enemy was twenty-five miles distant, and the ground between was swept by both parties.

On March 6 the battalion was ordered back to Natchez to do provost duty, with headquarters at the Court House.

The news of the capture of Richmond and the surrender of Lee was received with glad enthusiasm, and a triumphal procession occurred; but the exultation was of short duration, for soon came the news of the assassination of the president; and a sad column passed through the streets following the roll of the muffled drums, while the great guns of the fort struck the half-hours during the day.

On October 17, 1865, Special Order No. 6 was issued. Extract: "The Eighth New Hampshire Veteran Battalion will be put en route for Vicksburg preparatory to its muster out." Accordingly on October 29, the muster rolls having been signed, the battalion under the command of Capt. D. W. King embarked for Cairo. There the remnant of the Eighth took the cars for home; and at 10 P. M. on Tuesday, November 7, reached Concord, N. H., where the veterans were received by Adjutant-General Head, and Governor Smyth welcomed them to the hospitalities of the Old Granite State. At "Camp Gilmore" on November 9 the battalion was paid off and discharged.

This closes a brief account of the campaigns of a regiment that passed almost the whole of its term of service in an extreme southern state, its record of time being from its muster in to its final discharge, three years, ten months, and nineteen days.

The Eighth New Hampshire Volunteers was at Ship Island, Miss., attached to First Brigade, Department of the Gulf, March 18 to May, 1862; at "Camp Parapet," near Carrollton, La., in Department of the Gulf, May to October, 1862; attached to Reserve Brigade, Department of the Gulf, October, 1862; Second Brigade, Third Division, Department of the Gulf, January 13, 1863; Second Brigade, Third Division, Nineteenth Army Corps, August 29, 1863; Fourth Brigade, Cavalry Division, Department of the Gulf, January, 1864; on veteran furlough, July, 1864 (the men who did not re-enlist, and recruits remaining at Carrollton, La.); at Natchez, Miss., in District of Vicksburg, September to December, 1864.

The Veteran Battalion, Eighth New Hampshire Volunteers, was at Natchez, Miss., January 1 to October 28, 1865.

EIGHTH REGIMENT NEW HAMPSHIRE VOLUNTEER INFANTRY.

(THREE YEARS.)

Mustered into the service of the United States October 25 to December 29, 1861, at Manchester, by Seth Eastman, Lt. Col. 1 Inf., U. S. A. Organization completed December 29, 1861. Converted into a cavalry regiment by S. O. No. 314, Par. 6, Dec. 16, 1863, Department of the Gulf, and returned to infantry organization by S. O. No. 97, Par. 3, July 25, 1864, Department of the Gulf. Its designation as a cavalry organization was not specified in orders, but on the returns of the regiment from December 31, 1863, to February 29, 1864, it is styled First New Hampshire Cavalry, and from March 31, 1864, to June 30, 1864, as Second New Hampshire Cavalry. On January 1, 1865, in accordance with S. O. No. 1, January 1, 1865, Headquarters Post and Defences of Natchez, the re-enlisted men and those whose term had not expired were formed into a battalion of three companies known as the Veteran Battalion, Eighth New Hampshire Volunteers. The supernumerary non-commissioned officers were discharged January 1 and 2, 1865. The original members who had not re-enlisted and those whose term had expired were mustered out January 18, 1865, at Concord, by Ai B. Thompson, Capt. U. S. A. (retired). The Veteran Battalion, Eighth New Hampshire Volunteers, was mustered out October 28, 1865, at Vicksburg, Miss., by George A. Williams, Capt. 1 Inf., U. S. A. Each man was a volunteer appointed or enlisted for three years unless otherwise stated.

NINTH REGIMENT NEW HAMPSHIRE VOLUNTEER INFANTRY.

(THREE YEARS.)

By GEORGE L. WAKEFIELD, late Sergeant Company G, Ninth Regiment, New Hampshire Volunteer Infantry.

THE record of the Ninth New Hampshire is one of arduous campaigns, followed by comparative rest. It suffered in battle at Antietam and Fredericksburg, and in the mud at Falmouth; was cheered by the comforts of Newport News, and feasted in Kentucky; had its ranks depleted by disease in Mississippi, and returning to the Blue Grass region, recuperated for the hazardous march over the mountains of East Tennessee. At Annapolis it welcomed recruits and convalescents, in preparation for the bloody ordeals of Spottsylvania, the "Mine," and Poplar Springs Church, and for the wearisome waiting before Petersburg.

Recruiting for the Ninth began in May, 1862. The Sixth, Seventh, and Eighth regiments, organized in the latter part of 1861, had taken almost all the available men, and the mission of the officers who recruited the Ninth, was difficult; but, nevertheless, by July 31 many recruits had been mustered in at "Camp Colby," Concord, and the organization was completed August 23. The regiment started on the morning of the 25th, and proceeded, via Worcester, Providence, Groton (Conn.), and Jersey City, to Washington, arriving on the 27th, in the evening. The next morning it crossed the Potomac to "Camp Chase," near Fort Albany, Arlington Heights, and was assigned to General Whipple's Division, Defenses of Washington. September 6 it was transferred to the First Brigade, Second Division, Ninth Army Corps, which was to join the armies reorganized under General McClellan.

The Ninth Regiment found its corps at Leesboro, Md., and with the First Brigade, moved forward to check Lee's advance. On September 13 it bivouacked at Middleton; and on the 14th — just twenty days after its departure from New Hampshire — the Ninth Regiment alone charged a rebel brigade, and drove it from the crest of South Mountain. No other New Hampshire regiment went into battle with so little experience. Two days later, September 17, at 9 A. M., the Ninth was ordered to the front at Antietam, and took position on the left, opposite the "stone bridge" over the creek. After two hours' exposure to an incessant musketry fire at short range, from an enemy posted on the high and heavily wooded bank across the stream, the bridge was carried by storm, the Ninth being one of the first regiments over. It fought all day, and that night guarded the bridge.

After remaining near Antietam a few days, the Ninth encamped at Pleasant Valley until October 27, when it crossed the Potomac on a pontoon bridge at Berlin, and marched along the valley east of the Blue Ridge. On November 15 it was lightly engaged with a rebel battery at Warrenton (White Sulphur Springs), Va. General Burnside being now in command of the Army of the Potomac, the Ninth Corps, under General Willcox, was assigned to the Right Grand Division, and reached Falmouth November 19, going into camp at Stafford Heights.

The Rappahannock was crossed December 12, and that day and night the Ninth Regiment occupied the streets of Fredericksburg. Early the next afternoon the brigade was ordered into the fight by regiments. The Ninth moved to the left and rear of the city, and then, crossing the railroad, passed through a deep cut and over an open field, under a heavy, and at times almost enfilading, fire of artillery and musketry, until the front line was reached, where there was some shelter. Further advance was impossible, and after dark the regiment was withdrawn to the city; but in the evening of the 15th was again fortifying the line at the front. At midnight it was silently moved back, covering the retreat of the army, to the former camp on Stafford Heights. There the Ninth Regiment remained until February 9, 1863 — suffering greatly from sickness and deprivation — when, with its corps, it was ordered to Newport News, which it reached via Aquia Creek, on the 11th. The cleanliness here was in strong contrast with the mud at Falmouth. On March 25, at 4 P. M., the Ninth embarked on the steamer "Croton," for Baltimore, arriving at 2 P. M. the next day. It left that evening for Lexington, Ky., via Harrisburg, Pittsburgh, Columbus, and Cincinnati, pitching camp at Lexington on March 30. There, and at Winchester, Crab Orchard Springs, and vicinity, the troops remained until they were ordered to reinforce General Grant before Vicksburg. The men of the Ninth left Cincinnati for Cairo, June 5, arriving there on the afternoon of the 7th. The steamer "Armada," for Vicksburg, was boarded June 9. During the night following June 13 they anchored at Milliken's Bend; June 14 moved down to Young's Point, and disembarked at Sherman's Landing; June 15 were ordered to report on the Mississippi river below Vicksburg, but returned to former camp that night.

Grant's forces had surrounded the city, but Johnston was approaching from the east, and the Ninth Corps was sent up the Yazoo to Milldale. The troops disembarked, and the Ninth Regiment encamped about two miles from the landing. A line of defense was established from the Yazoo to the Big Black, and Johnston's reinforcements could not avail the beleaguered city. The Ninth made a reconnoissance of ten or twelve miles, towards the Big Black, on June 25. July 1 found the regiment entrenched at Oak Ridge. Vicksburg surrendered on the 4th. Johnston retreated, and the Ninth Corps pursued. On the 5th, the Fourteenth Corps joined the Ninth, and General Sherman assumed command of the pursuing Federals. At Jackson, Johnston halted; Sherman came up on the 10th, and on the 12th the Ninth Regiment, with its brigade, was stationed at the front, on the extreme left. There was some skirmishing on the 13th, several companies of the regiment taking part; but the Ninth was relieved the following day. July 17 it was found that the city had been evacuated, and on the 20th the return march began, the Ninth reaching its former camp at Milldale three days later.

The regiment was at Snyder's Bluff the 25th, and August 8 embarked for Cairo, arriving there on the afternoon of the 16th, after a most exhausting journey. All who were able took cars immediately for Cincinnati, reaching that city August 20; started for Nicholasville, Ky., on the 23d, and arriving there the same day, encamped near Camp Nelson. The brigade to which the Ninth belonged had been so reduced by sickness, that the regiments were separated and put on light guard-duty. During the last four months of 1863, the Ninth, with headquarters at Paris, guarded the Kentucky Central Railroad, and won golden opinions from the Kentuckians, who petitioned that the troops might be continued as guards as long as any were needed; but on January 15, 1864, the regiment was relieved from this pleasant duty, and ordered to Nicholasville; thence to Camp Nelson, which was reached at 7 P. M. on the 16th. A week later new Springfield rifles were issued in place of the old-style Windsors.

January 25 the Ninth started for Point Isabel, arriving at 1 P. M. on the 30th. There it remained until February 27, when it was sent to Knoxville, via Cumberland Gap, as an escort to the First Ohio Heavy Artillery. Knoxville was reached March 17, at noon, and in the early morning of the 21st the return march began. This going and returning was occasioned by the trouble which the guerrillas had caused in the mountain districts, and was especially hazardous at that season of the year, because of the bad roads. "Camp Burnside," at Point Isabel, was reached March 27, and March 31 found the regiment at Camp Nelson once more. It left Nicholasville April 2, and proceeded via Covington and Cincinnati, to Annapolis, Md., where the Ninth Corps was reorganized. The Ninth New Hampshire having been assigned to the First Brigade, Second Division, set out April 23 to join the Army of the Potomac.

Arriving at Washington on the 25th, the corps was reviewed by President Lincoln and General Burnside. Bristoe Station, on the extreme right of Grant's army, was reached April 27. On that day the Ninth was transferred to the Second Brigade, Second Division, Ninth Army Corps; but, with the Thirty-second Maine, was temporarily detached from its brigade to guard a train, and so missed the first day's battle in the Wilderness. Bristoe Station was left May 5, the Ninth marching twenty miles to the Rappahannock. It reached Germania Ford at noon, May 6, and that afternoon rejoined its brigade on the Wilderness battlefield, taking position in the line of support. The night of the 7th was passed near the old Wilderness tavern, where the regiment lay without stacking arms. Next day it was off for Chancellorsville, where it remained behind the earthworks till the afternoon of the 9th, when the division moved towards Fredericksburg, and bivouacked.

May 10 the division marched to the front, near Spottsylvania, and came under artillery fire. The following day it was withdrawn, marched to the rear, and given six days' rations. At daybreak, on the 12th, after an all-night exposure to a violent rainstorm, the Ninth, occupying the extreme right of its corps, and numbering about five hundred muskets, took part in the charge that was ordered along the whole line. companies I and G deployed as skirmishers, capturing about fifty prisoners. On account of the unevenness of the ground, the regiment became separated from its brigade, and advanced beyond it into "Bloody Angle," just in time to meet the enemy's advance and save the left of the Second Corps.

Here the Ninth became involved in its fiercest conflict. The enemy, in heavy force, met the regiment in front, and quickly moved around its left flank. Though bullets were rapidly thinning its ranks, and the left was wholly unprotected, yet, rallying around its colors, the Ninth met this onslaught with such a stubborn resistance that the enemy was thrown back to his works. The battalion fell back steadily a short distance, and established and held a line with the rest of its brigade. In this engagement the Ninth sustained a loss in killed, wounded, and missing, of over two hundred. The survivors were placed on picket at the apex of the angle formed by the lines of the Second and Ninth corps. During the night the enemy withdrew, but the regiment retained its position, doing some skirmishing, until the 18th. An advance was ordered then, and the Ninth, acting with other regiments as a support to the Irish Brigade of the Second Corps, was heavily engaged.

May 19 the corps was moved about four miles to the left, where it remained till the 21st. That afternoon it set out for the North Anna river, near which it bivouacked on the night of the 23d. The Second Brigade crossed the river next day, under a sharp artillery fire, and advanced to the front. Breastworks were thrown up, behind which the brigade remained till the 26th, when it was withdrawn to the north bank of the North Anna, a picket detail of the Ninth bringing up the rear. May 27 the brigade marched to Hanover town and fortified. On the 31st, at Totopotomoy Creek, the Ninth alone assaulted and carried the enemy's rifle-pits in front, charging through a miry ravine and up a steep bank under a galling fire. June 2 it was in the successful race for the abandoned works near Bethesda Church. June 3 it was in support of a battery at the same place. On the night of June 4 the brigade was moved to Cold Harbor, where it was employed in throwing up earthworks.

On the 12th the army was transferred to the south bank of the James, and the 16th found the Ninth in the vicinity of Petersburg. June 17, with the Sixth and Eleventh New Hampshire, it was engaged in the successful assault on the Shand House, capturing several hundred prisoners and three pieces of artillery. Then came two long months before Petersburg. Every alternate two days was passed in the trenches, most of the time in front of the fort which was then being undermined for the Battle of the Mine, in which engagement the Ninth bore a conspicuous part. It was the first to assault and to float its colors over the enemy's works at the "Crater."

August 19 the Ninth Corps was sent to the Weldon Railroad. Here it assisted the Fifth Corps in repulsing a determined advance of Confederates on August 20 and 21. Up to September 30 the corps were engaged in picket duty, building works, and making corduroy roads. On that day the Fifth Corps drove the enemy from their outworks at Poplar Springs Church; the Ninth Corps then advanced, came up with the enemy, and the Ninth New Hampshire, with its brigade, was ordered to charge. The Confederates again gave way; the impetuous Ninth New Hampshire followed, but encountering superior numbers was flanked and forced back, contesting every inch of the ground, to Pegram House, where the advance of the enemy was checked.

The Ninth Regiment remained near Poplar Springs Church till October 27, when it participated, as skirmishers, in the movement on Hatcher's Run. It returned to its former quarters October 28, remaining there until November 29, when the Ninth Corps was relieved by the Second and moved to Fort Alexander Hays, on the Jerusalem plank road, where the winter was passed.

When the final flank movement was made around Petersburg, the Ninth was among the forces left in front of the city. An assault had been planned for April 3, 1865, but at dawn it was seen that the enemy had evacuated their works, and the troops were soon in possession of the city.

The regiment performed its last active service April 8, when, with two others, it was detailed to guard several thousand prisoners captured by Sheridan. On the 11th it was relieved, and rejoined the Second Brigade at Burkesville Junction. Thence it started, on April 20, for City Point, Va., reaching that place on the 23d. On the 26th it embarked for Alexandria, arriving the next morning and going at once into camp, where it remained nearly a month. May 23 it participated in the grand review at Washington, and on June 10—the muster-out rolls having been completed and signed on the 10th—the regiment broke camp and returned to New Hampshire. The regimental colors were delivered to the governor at Concord on June 14, 1865, and that same day the regiment, having deposited its arms in the military depot, was paid and discharged.

The Ninth New Hampshire Volunteers was attached to Whipple's division, Defenses of Washington, August 28, 1862; First Brigade, Second Division, Ninth Army Corps, September 6, 1862; in District of Kentucky, Department of Ohio, September 9, 1863, to January, 1864; unassigned, in Department of Ohio, January to March, 1864; attached to First Brigade, Second Division, Ninth Army Corps, March 26, 1864; Second Brigade, Second Division, Ninth Army Corps, April 27, 1864.

TENTH REGIMENT NEW HAMPSHIRE VOLUNTEER INFANTRY.

(THREE YEARS.)

By JAMES ALBERT SANBORN, late Captain Tenth Regiment New Hampshire Volunteer Infantry, and Historian of the Regiment.

THE regiment was organized under the call of July 1, 1862, for 300,000 men. One company was recruited at Nashua and vicinity; one at Portsmouth; one at Andover and Wilmot; one at Farmington and Dover, while Manchester furnished the larger part of six companies. Capt. Michael T. Donohoe, then an officer of the Third New Hampshire regiment, was appointed colonel and Hon. John Coughlin, who resigned his seat in the New Hampshire legislature to accept, was appointed lieutenant-colonel. Manchester was selected as the rendezvous and the camp was named "Camp Pillsbury." Companies began to arrive on the 20th of August and on the 5th of September, 1862, the regiment was mustered into service of the United States.

September 22 the regiment embarked by rail and arrived at Washington on the 25th; en route one man was killed and several injured by a collision of trains near Baltimore.

On the evening of the 26th the regiment crossed the Potomac river via Long Bridge to "Camp Chase" on Arlington Heights, being assigned temporarily to Casey's division, Defenses of Washington.

September 29 it returned to Washington and on the following day proceeded by rail to Frederick, Md., and camped in the suburbs of the town. October 4 the regiment broke camp, marched to near Sandy Hook and camped on Maryland Heights. On the 6th camp was pitched in Pleasant Valley, Md. Here the regiment was assigned to the First Brigade (Col. Rush C. Hawkins), Third Division (Gen. George W. Getty), Ninth Army Corps (Gen. Orlando B. Willcox). For the following three weeks the regiment was busily employed in perfecting itself in camp duty, drills, inspection, reviews, and the usual preparations for an active campaign.

Late in October the Army of the Potomac began its second advance on Richmond and on the morning of the 25th the Tenth moved with its corps. At Gaskin's Mills, on the 10th of November, the enemy having driven in the Union pickets and threatened an attack, the regiment was sent out to support a battery and the men slept on their arms that night, the cold being intense. A halt of nearly a week was made here and the army was reorganized under General Burnside. Three grand divisions were formed, the Second and Ninth corps constituting the Right Grand Division which was commanded by Gen. Edwin V. Sumner.

November 15 the advance was resumed and while the Ninth Corps was crossing the north fork of the Rappahannock its wagon train was attacked. The Tenth was placed in support of a battery and was under fire for the first time. On the 19th the regiment camped at Falmouth, the camp being moved on the 28th to near the Phillips House where the regiment was constantly occupied with drill for the next two weeks.

At dark on the 11th of December the Tenth crossed into Fredericksburg. On the morning of the 13th it relieved the pickets on the railroad embankment at the left of the city, facing Hazel Run, then advanced, driving the rebel pickets, and occupied the railroad where it fought all day. Late in the afternoon the remainder of the brigade which had been held in reserve was brought up and with it the Tenth joined in the charge of Getty's division on Marye's Heights. After the repulse the regiment withdrew to the city where it lay in line of battle during the two following days in expectation of a renewal of the attack, returning on the night of the 15th to its old camp near the Phillips House.

During the next six weeks it was engaged in picket duty and the men suffered exceedingly from the cold and from insufficient food and clothing. On the 9th of February, 1863, the regiment went by rail to Aquia Creek and thence by boat to Newport News where it landed on the 10th. Here the usual routine of duty was resumed and the health of the command rapidly improved.

Longstreet's forces having threatened an attack on Suffolk, Getty's division was detached from the Ninth Army Corps; placed in the Department of Virginia and sent to reinforce General Peck who commanded the troops at Suffolk. The Tenth proceeded by boat to Portsmouth and thence by rail to Suffolk March 14. On the 11th of April Longstreet advanced in force and invested Suffolk. From this time until May 4 the regiment was constantly occupied in skirmishing, building earthworks, and performing picket duty. On the 19th of April Companies C, D, G, H, and K joined the expedition which crossed the Nansemond, stormed and captured the battery at Hill's Point.

Longstreet's forces were withdrawn on the 4th of May, and on the 13th the Tenth moved to Bowers's Hill eight miles nearer Portsmouth where a line of defenses was begun for the protection of Portsmouth and Norfolk. June 2 this line was abandoned for one four miles nearer Portsmouth, extending from the eastern to the western branch of the Elizabeth river. Camp was established near Getty's Station.

On the 22d of June the regiment marched to Portsmouth and from there went by boat to Yorktown where it remained until the 26th when it proceeded by boat to White House Landing on the Pamunkey river. July 1 marched to King William court house and during the next three days was constantly on the move, the marches being very severe. Littlepage's Bridge on the Pamunkey river was reached about 10 A. M. on the 4th and the regiment with its brigade guarded the bridge and fords while the remainder of the division advanced to cut the railroad and sever Lee's connection with Richmond. An artillery fight ensued. On the next morning the troops were withdrawn and the Tenth covered the crossing of the river and burned the bridge. Yorktown was reached on the afternoon of the 10th and here the regiment rested until the 12th when the march was resumed. The regiment reached Hampton on the next day; embarked for Portsmouth and thence marched to its former camp at Getty's Station. After a few days rest work on the fortifications was resumed.

On the 30th of July the camp of the Tenth was removed to Julian's Creek. Outposts were established at all important points and work on the fortifications was pressed forward with great vigor until November when the defenses were completed. While at Julian's Creek the regiment was thoroughly instructed in battalion and skirmish drill and considerable attention was given to target practice. The winter was passed quietly. On the 19th of March, 1864, the regiment moved to Great Bridge where it remained for a month doing picket duty and sending out scouting parties.

On the 19th of April the regiment broke camp marched to Dismal Swamp canal and proceeded via canal and river to Portsmouth, Va. On the next day steamed to Newport News, disembarked and marched to Big Bethel and on the 21st camped near Yorktown. About this time General Burnside requested that the regiment be returned to him and placed in the Ninth Army Corps, but his request was not granted and on the 22d it was assigned to the Second Brigade (Gen. Hiram Burnham), First Division (Gen. W. H. F. Brooks), Eighteenth Army Corps (Gen. W. F. Smith), Army of the James (Gen. B. F. Butler). On the 4th of May the regiment embarked for Bermuda Hundred where it landed before daylight on the 6th, and bivouacked near Point of Rocks.

On the 7th the Tenth led the advance on the Richmond and Petersburg Railroad near Port Walthall. After being under fire all day returned to camp. On the 9th another advance was made and the enemy was driven back. A portion of the regiment was hotly engaged on the skirmish line all day. At night Hagood's brigade of South Carolina troops charged Hunt's battery. Lieutenant-Colonel Coughlin led the Tenth in a countercharge and drove the enemy across Swift Creek with great loss. Another advance was made on the 12th. The enemy strongly posted, stubbornly contested the passage of Proctor's Creek. The Tenth crossed a swamp in front of the enemy and charged, clearing the entire front of the division and enabling the corps to cross the creek and deploy. On the next day the advance was continued and in the afternoon the regiment came under a heavy artillery fire. On the 14th the corps advanced and occupied the outer line of the defenses of Drewry's Bluff. Skirmish and artillery firing continued throughout the next day. Early on the morning of the 16th the enemy charged under cover of a dense fog. The right wing of the Eighteenth Corps was surprised and broken. Everything on the right (including the Eighth Connecticut and One Hundred Eighteenth New York of Burnham's brigade) was swept away until the Tenth was reached. Here the tide was stayed. Charge after charge was beaten back by the Tenth and Thirteenth New Hampshire who held the works for two hours after the remainder of the brigade had retired. Then they were withdrawn and acted as rear guard of the corps and that night camped at Bermuda Hundred.

Butler's army now took up its position on the line of intrenchments extending from the James to the Appomatox and here the regiment was constantly under fire. On the 27th it left the defenses and moved to the rear and on the 29th embarked for White House where it landed on the next day. Cold Harbor was reached on the afternoon of June 1 after a wearisome march, and the regiment at once charged with its brigade, the enemy being forced back. On the next day the regiment lay in rifle pits. Early on the morning of the 3d the Tenth as skirmishers led the assaulting column, carried a portion of the enemy's first line of defenses and held the same throughout the day, the position being more advanced than that of any other troops that charged on that day. The regiment remained in the front line at Cold Harbor, losing men every day until the 12th of June. At noon on the 12th it left the battle ground, marched to White House and on the next day embarked for Bermuda Hundred where it arrived early on the morning of the 14th and returned to its former camp behind the defenses.

At 3 A. M. on the morning of the 15th crossed the Appomatox and moved toward Petersburg, the intrenchments being reached in the afternoon. About 6.30 P. M. Burnham's brigade in column of regiments, the Tenth New Hampshire leading, with the Thirteenth New Hampshire deployed as skirmishers attacked and captured that portion of the main defenses known as Battery Five. The Thirteenth as skirmishers entered the works first and was closely followed by the Tenth. On the next day Companies A, E, and K assaulted an inner line and took more prisoners than they themselves numbered. On the 17th the corps returned to the defenses of Bermuda Hundred. June 21 again returned to the works at Petersburg, the Tenth holding the right of the line resting on the Appomatox river. July 29 the regiment moved to the left with its corps, relieving the Ninth Corps which was to make the assault on the explosion of the mine. At midnight on the 30th, the assault having failed, the regiment was relieved and on the 31st returned to its former position. August 20 the brigade moved to the left of the division near the Hare House. On the 25th the corps was relieved, marched to the rear and on the 27th returned to the Bermuda Hundred front, the Tenth being placed on the right of the line opposite the Confederate Howlett House Battery on the James river.

September 28 the brigade crossed to the north bank of the James at Aiken's Landing. Early on the next morning an advance was made and the enemy's skirmishers were driven back into Fort Harrison. General Stannard's (First) Division of the Eighteenth Corps preceded by the Tenth New Hampshire and One Hundred Eighteenth New York as skirmishers stormed and captured the fort. On the 30th the rebels made three desperate attempts to re-take the fort but were repulsed with great slaughter, the brunt of the attack falling on Burnham's brigade and the right of Stevens's brigade held by the Thirteenth New Hampshire. The Tenth New Hampshire and One Hundred Eighteenth New York were deployed by groups along the entire front of Burnham's brigade. A skirmish line detailed from the two latter regiments and the division sharpshooters, advanced after the Confederate repulse and captured the remnant of the assaulting party with all the dead and wounded, also every battle flag of Ransom's North Carolina brigade as well as some others. For several days the rebels concentrated the fire of their mortars on the fort.

October 26 the regiment was withdrawn from the works and moved to the rear. On the next day the corps moved to the Williamsburg road. Near Fair Oaks the rebels made a stand but were driven into their works. The Second Brigade charged the entrenchments but was repulsed with great loss. The Tenth went into the fight with ten officers and one hundred and twenty-four men and came out with two officers and twenty-five men. Many were captured here and afterwards died in rebel prison. On the 28th the troops returned to the vicinity of Fort Harrison (now called Fort Burnham) where the winter was spent.

On the 4th of December the Tenth was assigned to the Second Brigade (Col. Joseph H. Potter), Third Division (Gen. J. B. Carr), Twenty-fourth Army Corps (Gen. Alfred H. Terry commanding during the absence of Gen. E. O. C. Ord.), Gen. Charles Devens subsequently commanded the division. The exposure to cold and frequent and extended terms of picket duty made the winter one of hardship. The Tenth was among the first of the Union regiments to enter Richmond on the 3d of April, 1865. Following this it remained in Manchester, opposite Richmond, doing provost duty. On the 21st of June it was mustered out of the United States service and the next day with the Twelfth and Thirteenth New Hampshire started for home, arriving at Concord on the 27th, and was paid on the 1st of July. The record of the regiment is one of brave deeds and heroic sacrifices. No regiment fought more bravely or discharged more faithfully the duty which devolved upon it.

The Tenth New Hampshire Volunteers was attached to Casey's Division, Defenses of Washington, September 27 to 30, 1862; First Brigade, Third Division, Ninth Army Corps, October 7, 1862; Getty's Division, Department of Virginia, March 13, 1863; Getty's Division, Department of Virginia and North Carolina, July 18, 1863; for a time the regiment was attached to the Third Brigade, Second Division, Seventh Army Corps, Department of Virginia and North Carolina; Heckman's Division, Department of Virginia and North Carolina, January —, 1864; Second Brigade, First Division, Eighteenth Army Corps, April 22, 1864; Second Brigade, Third Division, Twenty-fourth Army Corps, December 4, 1864.

ELEVENTH REGIMENT NEW HAMPSHIRE VOLUNTEER INFANTRY.

(THREE YEARS.)

By LEANDER W. COGSWELL, late Captain Eleventh Regiment New Hampshire Volunteer Infantry, and Historian of the Regiment.

THE Eleventh New Hampshire Regiment of Volunteer Infantry was recruited in August, 1862, under the call of President Abraham Lincoln of July, 1862, for 300,000 men for three years. The Field and Staff, consisting of Col. Walter Harriman, Maj. Moses N. Collins, Adj. Charles R. Morrison, Q. M. James F. Briggs, Surg. Jonathan S. Ross, Asst. Surg. John A. Hayes, Chaplain Frank A. Stratton, were mustered into the service of the United States September 2, 1862, and on the 9th of the same month Moses N. Collins was mustered as lieutenant-colonel and Evarts W. Farr was mustered as major.

The several companies of the regiment were mustered into the service from August 28 to September 3, 1862, and the officers of the companies received their commissions September 4, 1862. The regiment consisted of 1,006 officers and men.

On Thursday, September 11, 1862, the regiment left Concord with orders to report to Major-General Wool at Baltimore, where it received orders to report to Brigadier-General Casey, at Washington, D. C., where it arrived on Sunday morning, September 14, remaining there two days; then ordered to Camp Chase on Arlington Heights, where it was brigaded with the Twenty-first Connecticut and the Thirty-seventh Massachusetts, Brigadier-General Briggs commanding. It remained here until September 28, following, when it marched back to Washington, thence by rail, October 1, to Sandy Hook, Md., and reported to General McClellan, and then marched up into Pleasant Valley and was brigaded with the Twenty-first and Thirty-fifth Massachusetts, Fifty-first New York, and Fifty-first Pennsylvania, Brig. Gen. Edward Ferrero commanding.

This was the Second Brigade of the Second Division of the Ninth Army Corps, in which brigade and division it remained during the war. October 27, following, the army commenced its march to Fredericksburg, Va., arriving at Falmouth November 19, and participated in the battle of Fredericksburg on the 13th of December, 1862.

February 11, 1863, the regiment was moved to Newport News, Va., where it remained until March 26, following, when it proceeded by water to Baltimore, Md., thence by rail to Kentucky, reaching Covington March 31. The next day the regiment proceeded by rail to Paris, where it remained until April 17, and then marched to Winchester, where it went into camp and remained until May 4, when it moved to Paint Lick Creek, remaining a couple of days, then marched to Lancaster. May 23 it marched to Crab Orchard, and on the 25th to Stanford, where it remained until June 3, when it was ordered to Nicholasville, thence by rail to Cincinnati, and June 5 moving by rail to Cairo, Ill.; there taking transportation by water for Vicksburg, Miss., reaching Sherman's Landing just above Vicksburg, June 14. The afternoon of the 16th the regiment sailed up the Mississippi and into the Yazoo river, camping at Milldale on the 17th, which place it fortified, remaining at this point three weeks; then marched to Oak Ridge, where it was employed in protecting the rear of Grant's army then besieging Vicksburg. On the afternoon of July 4, 1864, Vicksburg having surrendered that morning, the regiment took up its line of march for Jackson, Miss., forming a line of battle two miles from the city on July 11. The regiment assisted in forcing the enemy from Jackson, entering the city July 17, being one of the first regiments in the city; then returned to Milldale July 23, remaining there until August 6, following, when it embarked for Cairo, thence by rail, reaching Cincinnati August 14; marched over to Covington the same day, camping there until August 26; thence by rail again to Nicholasville and to "Camp Parke," four miles beyond, remaining there until September 9, when it broke camp and marched to Crab Orchard, arriving at London, Ky., September 16.

On Friday, October 15, 1863, the regiment commenced its march for Knoxville, Tenn., reaching there October 29, after a very hard march, during which it experienced some of the severe mountain storms of that region. It participated in the siege of Knoxville, which began November 17 and ended December 5. After the siege, the regiment assisted in the pursuit of Longstreet, in the mountains of East Tennessee, doing heavy and severe work in marching, picketing, skirmishing, and fighting; living upon the shortest rations, having many days but one ear of corn per day; with no new clothing for several months, being the only New Hampshire regiment that participated in that arduous campaign.

March 22, 1864, having sent the sick men and the baggage north, via Chattanooga and Nashville, the regiment commenced its return march over the mountains, reaching "Camp Parke" April 1, 1864, having marched 175 miles in eleven days, over the worst of roads, in the severest weather, carrying all their rations and equipments. The regiment passed through Cincinnati April 3, arriving at Annapolis, Md., April 7, there re-joining the Ninth Corps.

April 23, the regiment broke camp at Annapolis and commenced its march for the front, passing through Washington on the 25th, at which time the Ninth Corps was reviewed by President Lincoln and Major-General Burnside, and on the 6th of May, 1864, at 2 o'clock in the morning, the regiment formed a line of battle in the Wilderness.

From this time until the war ended, the regiment participated in all the marches, skirmishes, battles, and sieges of the campaign, and on April 3, 1865, it marched into Petersburg with colors flying. It participated in the pursuit of General Lee and his army, and after the surrender it was moved to City Point, April 4, remaining there until April 25, when it embarked for Alexandria, Va., which place it reached on the 27th; participated in the grand review in Washington, D. C., on May 23 and 24, and on Sunday, June 4, 1865, it was mustered out of the United States service and reached Concord June 7, 1865. At Concord the regiment was paid in full on Saturday, June 10, 1865, and was formally discharged from the service that day, having been in the service two years and nine months.

The Eleventh New Hampshire Volunteers was attached to First Brigade, Casey's Division, Defenses of Washington, September 16 to 29, 1862; Second Brigade, Second Division, Ninth Army Corps, October 6, 1862, to June 4, 1865.
